Objectives

The CAS International Tax Law: Comparative Law is a unique programme in Switzerland which aims at teaching the essentials of international comparative tax law. In order to provide participants with an international comparative approach, the lecturers have a very multinational background and they are well-known experts in their fields. The CAS is the ideal educational programme for experienced tax experts facing some of the most challenging issues within the globalized international tax world. All lessons (and exams) will be held in English.

Content

The programme includes the essentials of international tax law and treaty law, EU tax law, tax policy aspects and it contains an introduction to several foreign national and international tax laws.

Target Audience and Admission

The CAS is aimed at university graduates who have several years of experience as tax practitioners either in Switzerland or abroad. The programme is designed for in-house tax counsels, tax consultants and tax commissionaires who benefit from enhancing their experience in international tax law. The programme requires a tax background, but not necessarily a Swiss tax background.

Governing Body

The programme is offered by the University of Zurich, Faculty of Law and it is headed by Prof. Dr. Madeleine Simonek, holder of the Chair of Swiss and International Tax Law.
